David's Corner

This week I meditated over this quote found in his journal.

"Knowledge comes and goes, but wisdom continues." How true! There are things that I learned many years ago, during my academic training school or later in life as a chaplain. There is a lot of this knowledge that now seems fuzzy. What I do find comforting is that if there was a lesson to be learned from someone or from some experience these words of wisdom seem to be much longer lasting. I sometimes forget the details of something I heard or read but the truth that came from it is still informing me how to live life more abundantly.

As I age, I do not feel as quick as I use to be. Then I realize I am blessed with something more sustaining and that is the wisdom of experience. When someone bugs us we know to keep our mouth shut. When we feel an impulse to do something rash we restrain ourselves. When a mood comes over us that is disconcerting we know it will pass and is not who we are.

I am glad the Lord made us this way. Take heart, Jesus tells us. I believe that the gift of age is that we can take heart because the wisdom we experienced in our years of living is still with us to guide us. Thanks be to God!
